"Technology Disruptions"

Dr. Gerald Marquis - Professor, Tennessee State University

This month on Thursday June 13th Dr. Gerald Marquis has graciously agreed to talk to us about Technology Disruptions. "Progress" gets blamed for many things. Gerald will examine what the impacts are of progress due to technological innovations. These innovations come at us at an ever increasing pace and impact almost all of our daily lives. Gerald will examine the impact to many areas of commerce and our lives including Automobiles, Banking, Publishing, Logistics, Medicine and Employment, to name a few. How will displaced workers be retrained, and retrained to do what exactly?

If you like lively discussion and thought provoking material, this Month at AITP is the one not to miss.

Dr. Marquis is a Professor at Tennessee State University in the Business Information Systems department in the College of Business. He received his Ph.D. from Texas Tech University in Information Systems. He has been teaching computer information systems courses for over thirty years. Prior to his teaching, Dr. Marquis worked for over fifteen years in manufacturing, banking, and system software development. His research interests include systems analysis, systems design, and database systems. Dr. Marquis has supported the efforts of the Office of Business and Economic Research through the design and implementation of databases to manage their accumulated data.
